BigMachines, the global leader in configuration, pricing and quoting, today announced that Okta, the market leading on-demand identity and access management service, will be a Platinum sponsor of BigIdeas Las Vegas 2012. BigIdeas, the annual BigMachines customer and cloud conference for B2B professionals, will be held on November 11-13, 2012 at the Cosmopolitan of Las Vegas.

Okta enables enterprises to accelerate the secure adoption of their web-based applications, both in the cloud and behind the firewall so work gets done from any device, anywhere. With more than 1,500 pre-integrated applications in the Okta Application Network, including BigMachines, and free Microsoft Active Directory integration for a growing number of cloud ISVs and application developers, Okta provides IT centralized user provisioning, access management, and reporting for more than 150 enterprise customers today.

"Bigldeas has always been about showcasing customer success -- which is a major reason why we've chosen once again to be a sponsor of the conference. From high-level industry panels to customer case studies and best practices, Bigldeas aims to empower BigMachines' users, and potential users, to optimize their system processes through the cloud," said Frederic Kerrest, COO and co-founder, Okta. "By leveraging BigMachines and Okta, organizations are streamlining their sales process in the cloud in a secure and reliable way. Bigldeas 2012 is an opportunity for many of our joint customers to derive the greatest value possible from our integration and garner the most comprehensive support across user authentication and management for the BigMachines service."

"BigIdeas offers sales and business professionals a chance to meet with cloud-computing innovators and industry leaders, and learn how to leverage BigMachines to expedite growth and profitability," said Tom Padgett, Senior Vice President of Worldwide Sales and Alliances, BigMachines. "BigIdeas attendees will experience how partners like Okta can, along with BigMachines, help them reach higher levels of success."
